HISTORIC RESOURCES

- Map based on 2017 Historic Resources Survey (4 Zones) that documented buildings older than 1977
- We will adjust our urban form analysis for buildings older than 50 years to identify development patterns

HISTORIC RESOURCES - 50+ Yrs

- Most resources (90%) identified in 2017 Survey within the Historic District were built before 1968 (50 years)

URBAN FORM ANALYSIS

- On-the-ground documentation with photographs and measurements
- GIS analysis to measure setbacks and document frontage types, building heights, street experience for the entire study area
- Maps created based on each criterion that show patterns on each block

SETBACK & ORIENTATION PATTERNS

The prevailing building setback and orientation pattern helps define the street character and pedestrian experience. Roswell's Unified Development Code (UDC) sets minimum setbacks and defines a build-to zone to encourage buildings built near the sidewalk edge. See "Unified Development Code Frontage Standards" on page 23 for more information.

On streets with varied front yard setbacks, such as Upper Canton Street, the UDC required setbacks or build-to zone may sometimes be inconsistent with the existing historic pattern. In such cases, flexibility in the application of UDC standards may be available to promote buildings located within the traditional setback pattern, as illustrated below.

TRADITIONAL SETBACK PATTERN

Place a new structure within the range of front yard setbacks established by adjacent historic structures on the same side of the street.

Do not place a new structure closer to the street than adjacent historic structures on the same side of the street.

TRADITIONAL ORIENTATION PATTERN

Maintain the traditional orientation of buildings along the street.

Where the façades of existing buildings are aligned along the street, do not orient the front façade of a new building at an odd angle.

What is this Project?

The City of Roswell is leading a preservation-focused Master Plan for Roswell's Historic District that will establish a detailed vision for the district as a sustainable and thriving downtown that protects historic character and resources. The plan will also recommend potential changes to City regulations and standards to support this vision. This will occur over a 6-month period that includes many opportunities for public input.

Who is working on it?

TSW, an Atlanta-based architecture and planning firm, is conducting the Historic District Master Plan.

When is the next event?

Two-day design workshop at City Hall on November 27th & 28th. More details to come!
